Spirituality & Health Podcast

ISH is in the early stages of developing a podcast that focuses on a wide array of themes within the field of spirituality and health. Students will work with ISH Director of Ethnography & Workplace Chaplaincy, Susana McCollom to produce content and get it live. They will research potential topics and “guests”, generate scripts and outlines for episodes; record, mix, and produce content; and promote the podcast to the public.

Health Leadership History

Working with the Research Medical Library's (RML) Historical Resources Center, students will help build the internal infrastructure of the RML oral history project database of cutting-edge recordings of practitioners and health leaders, and use these materials in a research project. Students will gain an intimate knowledge of the history of cancer research, and the mechanics of creating and disseminating specialized oral histories.

Kaderli Letters on Death

This collection of 27 letters addresses the subject of death posed by Mrs. Kaderli when she asked leaders in the fields of art, music, literature, science, religion, medicine and other fields for guidance in explaining death to her small daughter. She received responses from famous figures such as Sir Julian Huxley, Aldous Huxley, C.S. Lewis, Eleanor Roosevelt and Carl Sandburg. The student will imagine and plan a project using the content of these letters.

Bilingual Atomic Bomb Archive

Students will help develop a Japanese-English online archive for materials relating to survivors of the atomic bomb attacks launched during World War II. Working with Japanese archivists and historians, as well as TMC Library archivists, students will create an online, bilingual site for digital objects.
