This course uses cartography as a lens for understanding historical change. We will analyze maps as ideas, and the technologies of mapmaking, and consider a number of the most important questions that have triggered historical debates.

- What is a map?
- Can we trust maps?
- Are maps objective representations of reality? If so, how do they gain authority?

These questions and more will be explored.